MILTON has been for some Years past so far treated as a Classic, that the most learned Persons have writ Dissertations and Notes upon this Work; and there is, as I am inform'd, an Edition of it ready for the Press, with an Interpretation in Prose, in the Margin, for the Use of Foreigners and Young People amongst us: So that there is nothing wanting of all that properly belongs to a classic Author, but what is here offer'd to the Public.

It would be Time lost to speak of the Use of such Indexes as these; all that is necessary to say, is, that Endeavours have been used to render this Index as copious as possible, except that such Particles and Prepositions are omitted, as would have only contributed to enlarge the Volume, and consequently increase the Expence: for it is not seen of what real Use the inserting such Words as and, of, for, to, not, and the like, could have been.

All doubtful Words, that is, such as are both Verbs and Substantives, as Accord; or Substantives and Adjectives, as Wild; or Substantives, Adjectives, and Adverbs, as Deep, and the like, are distinguish'd in the following manner;

Accord, II. 36.

Accord (verb) II. 503.

Wild, I. 407.

Wild (adjective) I. 60.

Deep, I. 152.

Deep (adject.) I. 28.

Deep (adverb) II. 302.

In a few Words, it is hoped nothing has been omitted, that could make this Index perfect, in every respect.

Use of such Indexes as these; all that is necessary to say, is, that Index-makers have been used to render this Index as copious as possible, except that such Particles and Propositions are omitted, as would have only contributed to enlarge the Volume, and consequently increase the Expence: for it is not less of what real Use the indexing such Words as and, of, for, to, not, and the like, could have been.
